¹ The Court has devoted an immense amount of time in considering and resolving a plethora of disputes concerning written discovery. While the action is wide-ranging in scope and every party has the right to vigorously pursue its claims and defenses, going forward, the Court will consider only those issues which the parties demonstrate they have made every genuine, good-faith effort to resolve among themselves before presenting to the Court. Given the lengthy period of time this case has been in fact discovery and the number of disputes the Court already has been required to resolve, any remaining written discovery disputes should at this point be few to none.
